The aim of the Leeds Beckett Repository is to provide open access to our research, as required by funder policies and permitted by publishers and copyright law.

The Leeds Beckett repository holds a wide range of publications, each of which has been checked for copyright and the relevant embargo period has been applied by the Research Services team.

We operate on a standard take-down policy. If you are the author or publisher of an output and you would like it removed from the repository, please contact us and we will investigate on a case-by-case basis.

Each thesis in the repository has been cleared where necessary by the author for third party copyright. If you would like a thesis to be removed from the repository or believe there is an issue with copyright, please contact us on openaccess@leedsbeckett.ac.uk and we will investigate on a case-by-case basis.

Although there are examples of successful deployment in schools, there is also evidence that coaching often struggles to meet expectations. This article aims to use socio-cultural theory to explore why coaching does NOT transplant readily to schools, particularly in England, where the object of coaching activity may be in contradiction to the object of dominant activity in schools – meeting examination targets.

Dialogue creates opportunities for learning and change; striking balance between organisation's agenda and individual's motives & interests.

Coaches use structures, disciplines and tools to underpin coaching (e.g. video, listening mode, Thinking Environment). Coaching often introduced to, 'close the gap', 'sharpen practice', 'solve the problem' Coaching is not about 'saving people', a 'quick fix', 'performative'.

Coaching means being 'listened to', being 'attentive to', allowing coaches to 'open up' & 'do their best thinking'.

Coaching is 'reciprocal', 'exploratory', 'authentic', and allows coaches and coaches to 'share', 'learn' in relation to 'bespoke' approaches. Use of coaching in educational settings often sought as new approach to existing issue

ABSTRACT

Coaching has been evolving as a form of professional development for teachers and school leaders for several decades, and now exists in many forms. This study focused on the work of six coaches in England, using an adapted focus group approach to discover how they explained and conceptualised the value of their practices. As the coaches' conversations with each other emerged details of the nature of their work, and their reflections on it, were elicited which were analysed thematically while also paying due attention to individual narratives. Although coaching is not easily defined this study demonstrates the significance of relationships and dialogue in coaching and the structures and protocols that support that. It suggests that coaching is suited to helping individuals dealing with authentic challenges, professional interests and dilemmas experienced in complex educational settings, while also acting as a counterweight to some of the consequences of performativity. The study also suggests that coaching may be a valuable means to deploy the expertise of experienced professionals to support an education system exposed to problems of retention of both teachers and school leaders.

"This is my first time being mentored; it changes the way you see yourself as a teacher."

"I do not see coaching as adding to our workload as the benefits are real".

"This school is like a family; when I wake up in the morning I feel no stress. If I have a problem with a student, I know I will get the help I need. It's not a secret. In a family we work together."

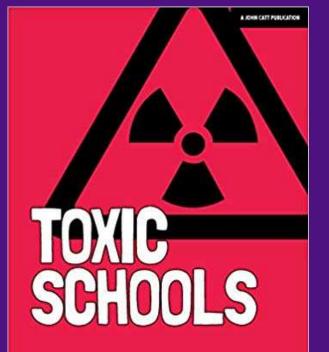

"There is a lot of power in this building; people are observing each other all the time, our doors are open, we are always asking questions."

"It is our job to create this environment, we hear teacher voice and we make changes". (Principal)
