Purpose – Coaching in educational settings is an alluring concept, as it carries associations with life coaching and well being, sports coaching and achievement and improving educational attainment. Although there are examples of successful deployment in schools, there is also evidence that coaching often struggles to meet expectations. This article aims to use socio-cultural theory to explore why coaching does NOT transplant readily to schools, particularly in England, where the object of coaching activity may be in contradiction to the object of dominant activity in schools – meeting examination targets.

CollectivED: Making sense of coaching for professional development in education

BLOGS HOME / CARNEGIE EDUCATION / COLLECTIVEDMAKING SENSE OF COACHING FOR PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN EDUCATION

by Professor Rachel Lofthouse | 18/10/2018 | 0 Comments

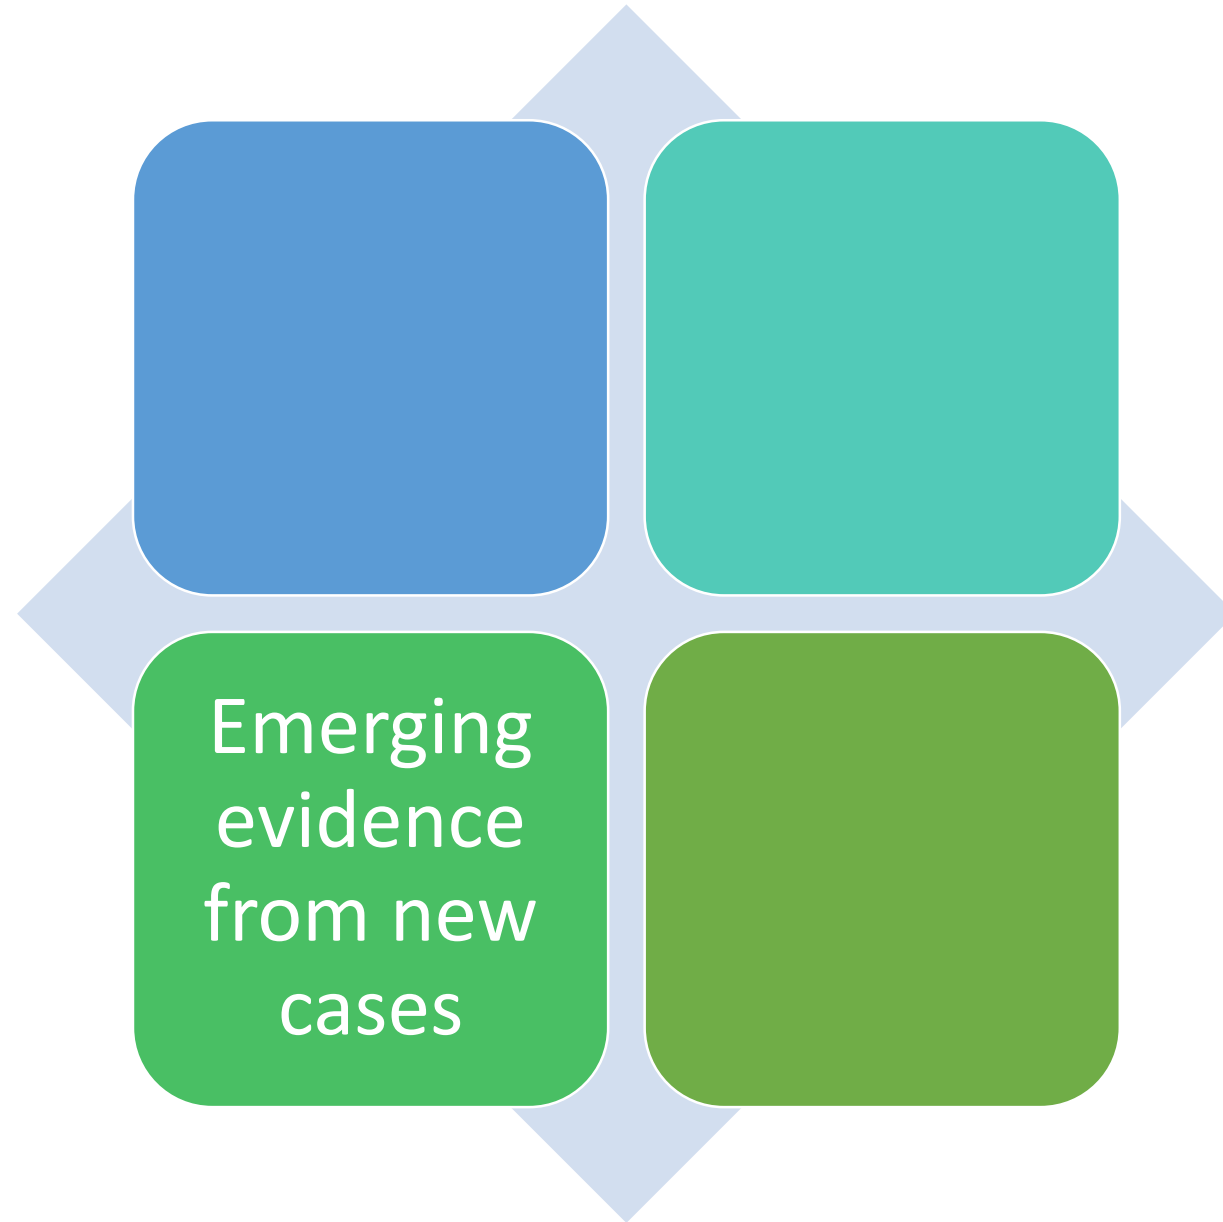

Our Leeds Beckett University research and practice centre 'CollectivED: the Mentoring and Coaching Hub' officially launched on the 14th March with over 50 Teachers, Teacher Educators, Academics and Education / Coaching Professionals attending our inaugural event - Coaching in Education: Why bother?

ABSTRACT

Coaching has been evolving as a form of professional development for teachers and school leaders for several decades, and now exists in many forms. This study focused on the work of six coaches in England, using an adapted focus group approach to discover how they explained and conceptualised the value of their practices. As the coaches' conversations with each other emerged details of the nature of their work, and their reflections on it, were elicited which were analysed thematically while also paying due attention to individual narratives. Although coaching is not easily defined this study demonstrates the significance of relationships and dialogue in coaching and the structures and protocols that support that. It suggests that coaching is suited to helping individuals dealing with authentic challenges, professional interests and dilemmas experienced in complex educational settings, while also acting as a counterweight to some of the consequences of performativity. The study also suggests that coaching may be a valuable means to deploy the expertise of experienced professionals to support an education system exposed to problems of retention of both teachers and school leaders.

Teacher Induction Program (TIP) in WQSB

The TIP runs for two years for ALL new teachers to the Schools in the school board. It has been sustained and evolving over 10 years.

The Voice of Teachers and Principals

This is my first time being mentored; it changes the way you see yourself as a teacher.

This school is like a family; when I wake up in the morning I feel no stress. If I have a problem with a student, I know I will get the help I need. It's not a secret. In a family we work together.

There is a lot of power in this building; people are observing each other all the time, our doors are open, we are always asking questions.

I do not see coaching as adding to our workload as the benefits are real.

It is our job to create this environment, we hear teacher voice and we make changes. (Principal)

The voice of the school board

We use coaching as a systematic approach at all levels to share knowledge that exists within our system, and to develop a common language. We haven't adopted 'one model' of coaching, we have blended and adapted models over time, and we feel we own what we do. The data we have on teacher performance demonstrates a steady increase in performance from TIP participants.

We call them Mentor-Coaches because they are both of these things, and the training and documentation helps them to make appropriate decisions about which stance to take. What we hear from our 'master coaches' is that it takes them about 3 years in practice to feel fully confident in this.

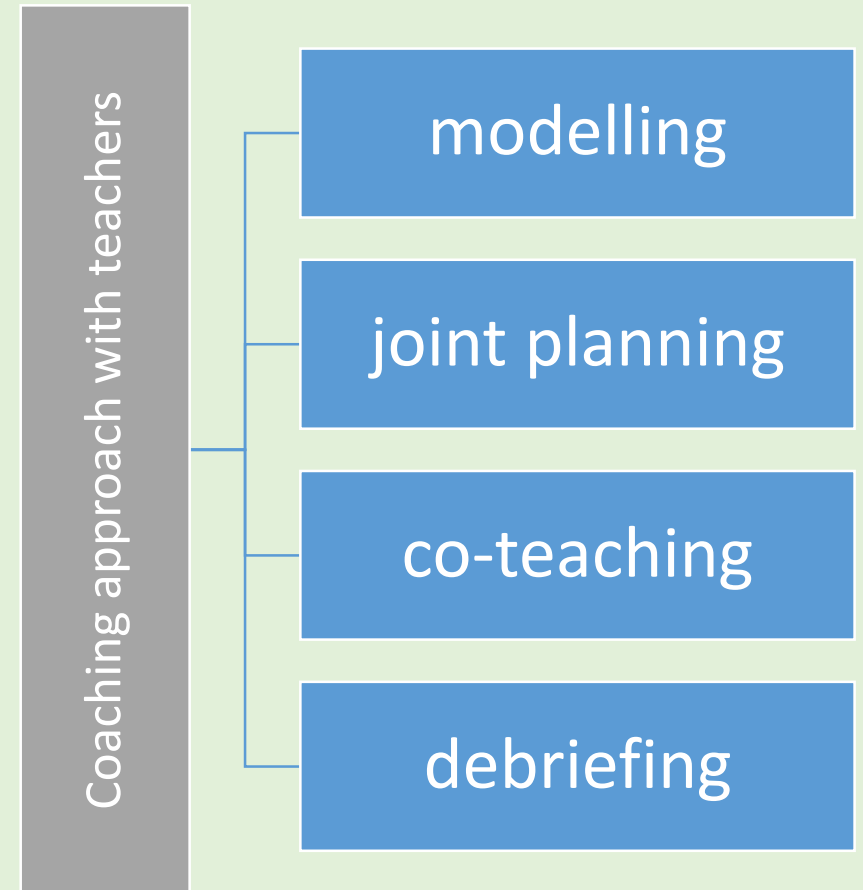

The work of Mentor-Coaches is structured through common expectations or offering guidance and support but they also invest in building trust with the new teacher. Our Mentor-Coaches recognise the significance of reciprocal learning, the relationships that they build and of reflection.

Contextualised Specialist Coaching:

Swaledale Metacognition in Service Schools SSIF Evaluation

- A pedagogy-led project with collaborative coaching approach to delivering metacognition in the classroom and focused on mathematics
- Lead Practitioners / coaches designed pedagogic approaches appropriate to project's teachers and pupils, contextualised by the individual challenges in each school, the different year groups, different levels of experience and the different roles of the teachers they worked with.
- Not a 'clean coaching' model; elements of mentoring, guidance and feedback integral to it in it, aligning it with the 'specialist coaching' approach defined by CUREE (2005).

Coaching offered reciprocal and cumulative benefits

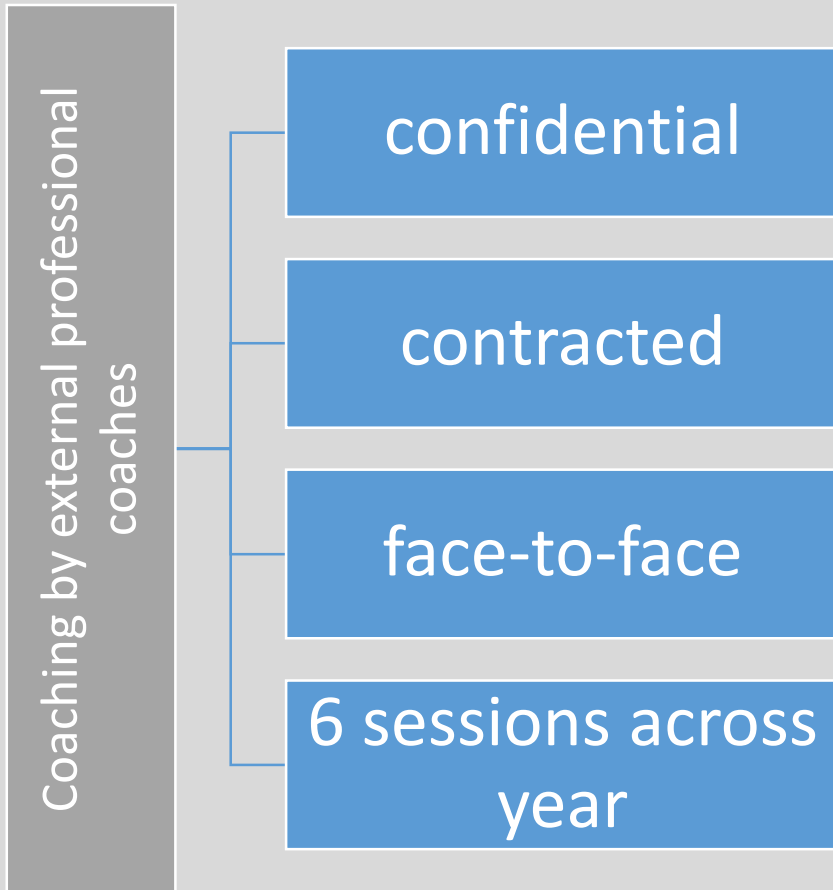

“Usually for the training sessions, you get half a day after the Christmas or summer holiday, whereas with this you get continued support. Other training sessions are an hour here and an hour there and there is no one afterwards to help you or check on you or to discuss it with.

The difference between this project and anything else we’ve done in the past, is the support.” Lead teacher

The Lead Practitioners / coaches have all grown in their teaching and coaching skills as a result of the project. The LPs have all gained considerable insight into school improvement work and have the potential to use this effectively in future roles. They reported improved coaching and communication skills as well as the ability to negotiate difficult situations and relationships.

Headteacher Coaching: England, NEU

Emerging findings (Feb, 2019, HT questionnaires, 77% participants):

- The goals are centred around work-life balance and this impacts on professional performance and resilience.*
- Coaching will continue to enable me to tackle challenging circumstances and scenarios in a calm way that will mean I retain a sense of optimism in the solutions I am constantly working on.*
- The coaching has given me more confidence in terms of self-esteem and helped me to deal with a line manager who was micro managing at its best.*
- I am learning that my priority is the children in my school and helping staff to be the best they can be, so that our children are happy and learning.*

Number of years in senior leadership role		Number of years as headteacher
5 yrs or less	9 people	2 yrs or less	10 people
6-15 yrs	13 people	3-6 yrs	10 people
Over 15 yrs	8 people	Over 6 yrs	10 people

Emerging questionnaire findings (Feb 2019)

Gaining confidence in role

Supporting problem-solving

Getting better at developing other staff within school

Improving working relationships e.g. with governors

Coping with continuing demands of the job including emergency management

Developing ability to reflect and drill down to specifics of challenges

Gaining work-life balance

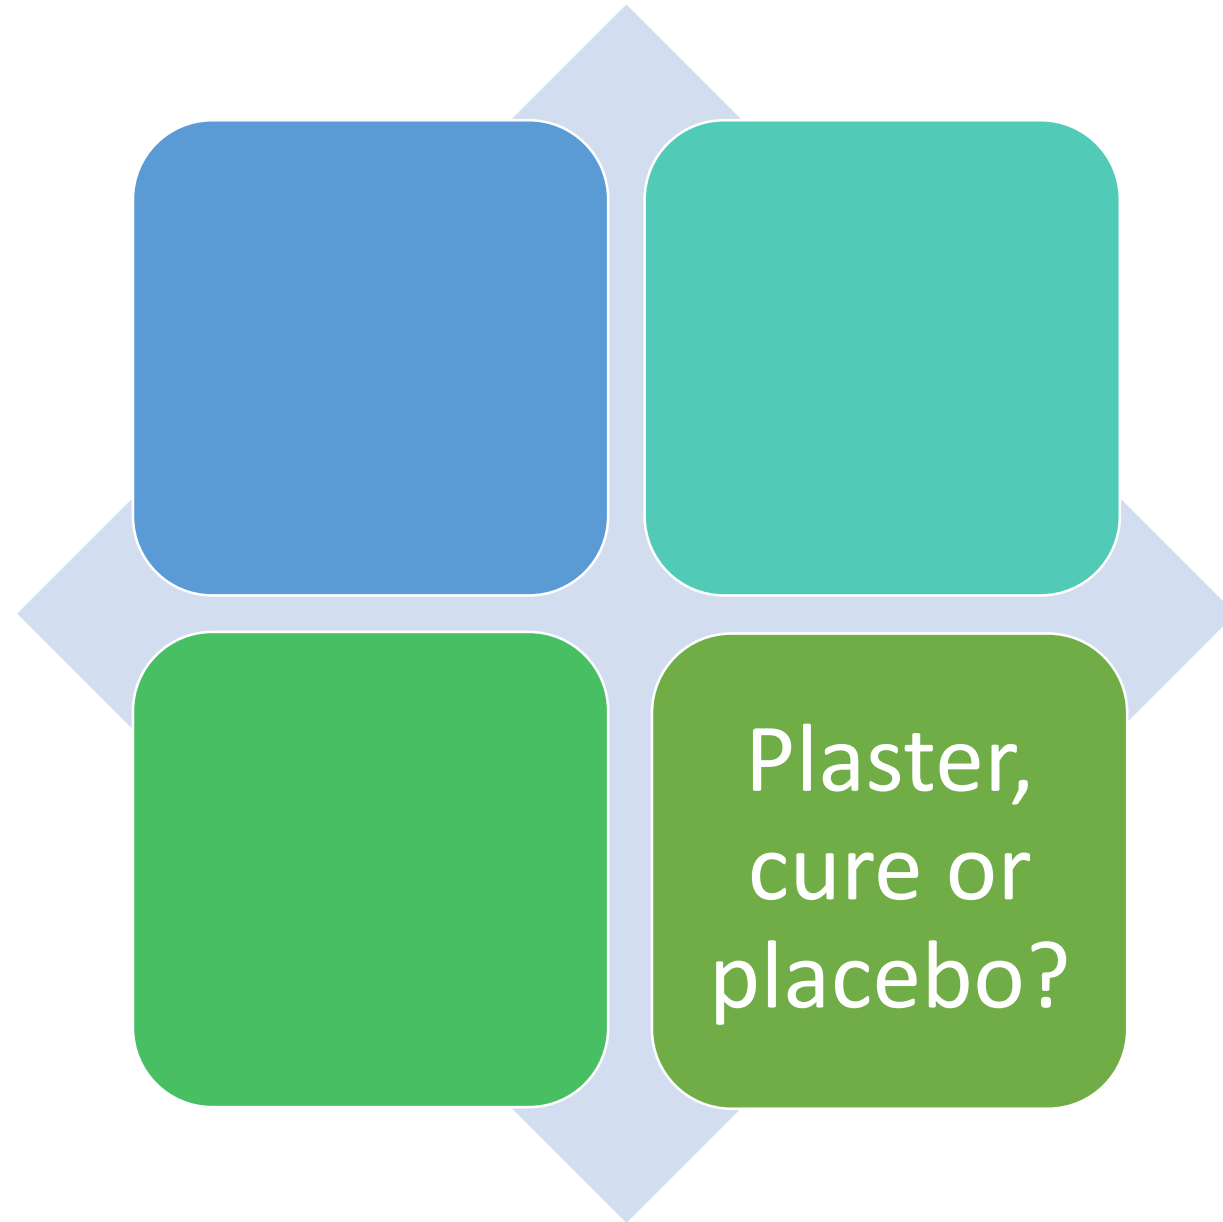

Managing difficult issues and people by gaining new perspectives

Being able to think more strategically

Coaches providing emotional support

Recognition of the importance of developing teachers and systems to better support children's learning and wellbeing.
